THAMES WATER FLOOD

What happened

Two years on...

- 27 out of 58 compensation cases remain unsettled
- Those who've settled are still significantly out of pocket
- Café Prov on the verge of closure
- Key premises remain empty
- Footfall remains down
- Uphill struggle for rightful compensation is huge drain on local community's energy, time and resources

Star project: Come in for a

Project aim

To raise enough funds to recover from the Thames Water flood and avoid imminent closure.

About the project

Two years ago, a burst Thames Water pipe devastated our business and the whole of Half Moon Lane. We were underinsured by 50%. To re-open and keep paying our staff, we had to beg, borrow and (very) steal. Times were impossible hard.

When our insurance payment did come through, not only was it 50% below what the restoration cost us, but of the sum provided, 7% went straight to the tax man! £11,000 went straight to our insurer's appointed clean-up team (although we were assured Thames Water would pay for them) and a huge chunk went towards storage fees for the water while we waited for the insurance to be paid back to us. Our 10th anniversary was cancelled for the first time in 10 years. It was a disaster.

Traders tell of long battle with Thames Water for compensation after flooding in Herne Hill

MARK BLUNDEN | Wednesday 26 August 2015 09:44 BST | 24 comments

Burst main: The future of the Half Moon pub is uncertain after the flooding hit

Traders in a London shopping street devastated by flooding today revealed they were still battling Thames Water for compensation two years on.
